Conference on Marine Aquaculture: Effects on the West Coast and Alaska Fishing Industry

November 17-19, 2003

Bell Harbor International Conference Center
2211 Alaskan Way
Seattle, Washington

Recent restrictions in West Coast and Commercial ground fisheries will continue the recent trend of reduced landings. Meanwhile the aquaculture industry continues to capture a larger domestic seafood market share. According to the US Department of Agriculture, the percentage of total U.S. seafood consumption coming from aquaculture has continued to rise over the last several years, but the bulk of the increase has come from higher imports of farm-raised products. Besides Atlantic salmon, other species being cultured include: Atlantic halibut, Atlantic cod, cobia, red drum, and Pacific threadfin. Also, commercially important fishes to the West Coast and Alaska such as sablefish (black cod) and Pacific halibut are being considered as potential aquaculture species.

Federal and state efforts are also underway to promote marine aquaculture. One of the goals in NOAA's "Strategic Plan for FY 2003 - FY 2008 and Beyond" is "increased ocean fisheries production through environmentally sound aquaculture technology." Also, the National Marine Fisheries Service has developed a draft "Code of Conduct for Responsible Aquaculture in the U.S. Exclusive Economic Zone." Concerns have also been raised, most notably with the cultivation of Atlantic salmon in British Columbia, about negative impacts from net pen culture including disease transfer, pollution from net pen facilities, and ecological impacts from escaped fish.

With the future of the West Coast and Alaska fishing industry tied to future developments in the aquaculture industry both domestically and globally, the PSMFC will be hosting a 3-day-long conference that will focus on economic and environmental impacts of aquaculture. The conference entitled "Marine Aquaculture: Effects on the West Coast and Alaska Fishing Industry" will take place November 17-19, 2003 at the Bell Convention Center in Seattle, Washington.

Plenary Session topics will include:

- Overview of West Coast and Alaska Aquaculture including Atlantic Salmon
- Trends in the Commercial Fishing Industry
- Update on Federal Aquaculture Policy in the EEZ.
- Culture of Non-Salmonid Species in US, Canada
- Update on Aquaculture Activities in the European Union

Panel discussions will be held on what constitutes environmentally sustainable aquaculture, and what are the potential economic opportunities to the region from aquaculture.
